Hi Peter,

We are following up again regarding the questions we first submitted on September 10 concerning the September 3 inspection report, the complete-barn smoke/heat detection requirement, and the status of the already-issued ADU Certificate of Occupancy.

We received the MRI report Thursday morning and responded with our questions within hours. We followed up again Friday and Monday morning and have not yet received clarification.

The report imposed a 10-day timeframe, and our electrician reported that the existing ADU Certificate of Occupancy had been discussed as potentially being affected if the requested work was not completed. Given the seriousness and apparent urgency of those statements, we have made repeated and timely efforts to obtain clarification.

We are still requesting written answers to the questions previously submitted, particularly the applicable code requirement, the occupancy classification being applied, the relationship between the barn detection requirement and the existing ADU CO, and confirmation of what remains outstanding for final approval.

At this point, several business days have passed since our initial request while the timeframe stated in MRI's report continues to run. We would appreciate a written response clarifying these requirements and the status of the ADU Certificate of Occupancy.

Thank you,

Jared Hanselman
